Editor's note — Last issue asked where people drink. This one asks what they go to bars to eat, then opens our own ledger: brands between diner and bar added accounts this year. Look past the names to the shared structure.

'A quick drink' or 'out for dinner'?

Guests no longer split bars from diners the way they used to. Makgeolli at a home-style diner, soju with fried peppers. The stores on that line were the ones adding accounts with us this year.

Three channels point the same way

Dinner (60,671) outnumbers lunch (17,061) 3.6 to 1 — a bar that serves a meal is a first-stop dinner venue, not a lunch spot. Beer and highball come up before soju. Since mid-September, Instagram store posts follow one script: 'cooler weather → soup → a drink'.

PRICE TALK DID NOT GROW

Posts with 'value / cheap / price / set menu': Naver 40.7 → 40.1%, Instagram 10.0 → 10.1%. Before cutting drink prices, make it obvious at a glance what a table eats and for how much.

HOW TO READ

This year's Sewang supply value to each brand = 100%, split into five main categories. Example: Uirak draft beer 25% means 25% of supply value. Not the same as sales volume or what guests actually drink.

ALL LIQUOR SEWANG SUPPLIED THIS YEAR = 100% · what share is what

THREE CELLS ARE ENOUGH

① Draft beer — the marker of a hybrid (meals plus drinks). 0% means Sewang supplies none. ② Soju — 33–70%; the range between brands is wide. ③ Whisky/highball — 5–16% at all seven brands, including 10–12% at the home-style and soup-and-rice diners.

* Sewang supply value, 2026.1–9. Whisky/highball includes gin, vodka and liqueurs; makgeolli/cheongju includes other traditional liquor. Sewang supply only, not the store's total purchases. Rounding and omitted minor items mean rows may not sum to 100%.

Brands come and go; structure stays

01 Does one signature dish say why guests come?

Fried peppers, cheonggukjang, mungtigi, whole chicken, bean-sprout soup — one dish describes the store.

02 Does each seat work twice a day?

With lunch guests, add evening drinks; with only evening guests, a meal can be added.

03 Is your drink mix diner-type or hybrid?

The five hybrids run draft beer 16–25%, whisky/highball 5–16% of Sewang supply value. Compare with your orders.
